CHINA, SOUTH KOREA STEP UP SANCTIONS ON NORTH KOREA

1 China has barred a North Korean freighter from one of its ports and South Korea announced a crackdown on individuals and companies linked to Pyongyang's weapons program, stepping up sanctions against the isolated state. North Korean general cargo ship Grand Karo arrived at Rizhao port in northeastern China a few days ago, but the port did not allow the ship to berth, said a person at the Rizhao Maritime Authority who was not authorized to speak to the media, and therefore declined to be identified. The ship is among 31 vessels blacklisted by China's Ministry of Transport after they were covered by harsher sanctions on North Korea that were approved by the U.N. Security Council last week. FCC PROPOSAL FOR $9.25/ MONTH LOW-INCOME BROADBAND SUBSIDY

2 The head of the Federal Communications Commission circulated Tuesday a final proposal seeking approval for a $9.25 monthly subsidy for low-income Americans to get broadband Internet access. Since last year, the FCC has been considering revamping the $1.5 billion annual program, called Lifeline, which has helped lower-income Americans get access to telecommunications technologies since 1985. FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler has said he wants to give those receiving the subsidy a choice of using it for phone services, high-speed Internet or both. But households will get only a single $9.25 a month subsidy that would apply to both services. The program currently helps about 12 million U.S. households afford landline and mobile phones, according to agency estimates. REUTERS

SHARAPOVA STARTS TO COUNT COST OF FAILED DRUG TEST

3 Swiss watchmaker TAG Heuer said Tuesday it was severing ties with Maria Sharapova as the world's highest-paid female athlete started to count the cost of a failed drug test and likely ban from tennis. Nike and German luxury car maker Porsche also said they were suspending their relationship with the five-time Grand Slam champion as the 28-year-old Russian awaits a decision on whether she will be banned. The failed drug test at January's Australian Open, one of four annual Grand Slam events, will be costly for her at a time when sports bodies and sponsors are taking a tough line following a series of corruption and doping scandals.

Through a venture with Project H.O.M.E, city and state officials broke ground Tuesday on a housing project aimed at tenants who were once homeless.

JENNY DEHUFF

letters@metro.us

A major housing project is going up on North Broad Street that will put a roof over the heads of those who were once homeless.

City, state and local officials broke ground Tuesday on 2415 N. Broad St., a construction development consisting of 88 affordable housing units with 2,457 square feet of retail space at the street level just north of Temple University.

The $24 million project is funded by a combination of public and private money of donors to Project H.O.M.E., as well as through the Philadelphia Housing Authority, the Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency and others.

"We understand that building community with each other is the ultimate answer to the degradation of homelessness and poverty and many of the struggles that are faced by our city and our nation," said Joan Dawson McConnon, co-founder and associate executive director and CFO of Project H.O.M.E.

"It isn't separation that gives us strength. It's the coming together of people from all walks of life to share their talents, their knowledge and their resources to make this a better and more just society."

Project H.O.M.E. estimates that on a given night in Philadelphia in 2015, there were 650 homeless individuals living on the streets, about half of whom were in Center City.

"In many cases, it's not their fault. It's something that happened in their life that they could not recover from, but they're still human beings, and they still have a story."
Kenney

The low-income tenants at 2415 N. Broad St. are identified through the city's selection process and Janet Stearns, real estate developer for Project H.O.M.E., said that the organization has been working closely with the city to fill those spaces.

The building will have typical security systems in place — cameras, keycard access and a 24-hour reception desk, "like there would be for any new apartment building," said Stearns.

But perhaps the most touching and unexpected story Tuesday morning was that of Malou "Penny" Bonnie, the young resident of JBJ Soul Homes, the 55-unit permanent supportive housing residence for adults made possible by Project H.O.M.E. on Fairmount Avenue.

Bonnie said she moved to the U.S. from Liberia when she was only 5 years old with her stepmother, but quickly found herself a foster kid, and was passed around from family to family before she got settled with people whom she felt really cared.

"I had about six different care workers and families to get to know, so I built up a wall to everybody from having to get to know so many people over and over again," she said.

"After a few years, when it was time for me to come out of foster care and time for me to move, my agency was doing nothing to help me transition and look for different housing programs. … I was about to be stuck with no home. When I moved into Project H.O.M.E. I just remember everyday felt like the first day. It was really beautiful. I said, 'Oh my, God. This is mine.'"

Bonnie, now in her 20s, said she studies criminal justice in college and works at Allied Barton security services. She said she hopes to motivate others to be persistent and stick through tough times.

"Every one of those individuals who find themselves in that homeless situation is a human being with a story," said Mayor Jim Kenney, "and if you understand their story, then you understand how they got where they are."

Artists map changing lives in South Kensington through photography

The Philly Block Project, an artistic collaboration to document the lives of South Kensington residents and the community's history, is kicking off with its first exhibit opening this weekend.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Photographer Lori Waselchuk stands in front of some of her photographs at the Philadelphia Photo Arts Center ahead of Thursday night's opening of "Preface: An Introduction to the Philly Block Project," a ongoing collaborative history and photo project working with residents of Kensington. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

In the ever-changing landscape of South Kensington, artists are stepping up to work with neighbors in documenting the community's history.

"Even since we started documenting it, one of the local cafés closed down — they're going to demolish it and put in new houses," said photographer Hank Willis Thomas, one of the artists working on the Philly Block Project with the Philadelphia Photo Arts Center (PPAC). "Change is happening rapidly."

The Philly Block Project has two components: to collect the old family photos and vintage images of the people who live in South Kensington, their families and their lives, and also to send out artists like Thomas to photograph the present-day lives of neighbors.

Over the next several months, photographers, curators, artists and archivists will be fanning out through South Kensington to obtain the raw material for the project.

"As a local art community, they wanted to focus the project on their community, which is both extremely ethnically diverse, but also on the verge of a huge change as a result of gentrification," Thomas said of PPAC.

Indeed, new housing is constantly going up in South Kensington, a semi-industrial area with huge swathes of vacant land that is roughly bounded by Girard and Berk Street and Front and Sixth streets.

PPAC itself is housed in the Crane Arts Building — formerly a plumbing company — at the intersection of North American and Master streets, an area where developers have proposed hundreds of new housing units.

Photographer Lori Waselchuk, the Philly Block Project's coordinator, said the project has deepened her connections with the neighborhood.

"It doesn't feel like an art project, it feels like we're building friendships," Waselchuk said. "We get to do it around what we love, which is photography, but we get to share that. I feel like oftentimes we're going to see friends and we're building."

The project specifically aims to document change in the area.

In an area dominated by many huge vacant industrial buildings, some still-active manufacturing companies, and bordered by crime-ridden neighborhoods to the north and east, residents new and old are engaged in their own individual ways of adapting to inevitable change.

"A hundred years ago industry was big and thriving in this neighborhood. When that industry closed, it caused a dramatic change in the neighborhood," said PPAC executive director Sarah Stolfa. "We're seeing another big change happen, where development is coming in, mostly residential. … It's very important to talk about the history of this neighborhood, and the present-day landscape is going to be part of that history."

Thomas described what he has discovered in his work on the project as a diverse neighborhood where on a single block you can find Puerto Rican, Turkish, African-American and Dominican families living side-by-side.

"They came at different times for different reasons, and experienced the neighborhood in different stages," he said. "Some people think it's nice that certain things have improved."

But everyone has one thing in common: their neighborhood.

"The residents that are participating in the project love where they are. They really speak highly of the neighborhood. They understand that they have a relatively peaceful spot," Waselchuk said. "It was hard won."

How to get involved

PPAC's next monthly community meeting related to the Philly Block Project will be held on March 8.

The first photography exhibit related to the project, "Preface: An Introduction to the Philly Block Project," opens March 10 at PPAC.

An exhibit of found neighborhood photographs curated by Kalia Brooks will open in June, and an exhibit of new neighborhood photography opens in September.

‘Intense’ probe nets two suspects in murder

Khalil Davenport and Nasir McNamee PPD

Two suspects have been arrested and charged with a murder last week off Lehigh Avenue, police announced Tuesday.

Khalil Davenport, 20, and Nasir McNamee, 15, are charged with the murder of 20-year-old Jayvon Middleton-Pendleton on March 2, police said.

Middleton-Pendleton, of the 2200 block of South Lambert Street, was reportedly shot multiple times around 6:39 p.m. on the 2700 block of Bonsall Street, just off of Lehigh Avenue in North Philly. A 20-year-old man walking with him was not shot at the time.

A .38-caliber revolver was recovered from underneath Middleton-Pendleton, police said.

Middleton-Pendleton died about two hours later from his injuries at Temple Hospital.

“As a result of an intense investigation, homicide investigators developed two suspects in the murder of Jayvon Middleton-Pendleton,” a police report on the arrests stated.

Davenport, of the 2700 block of North 23rd Street, and McNamee, of the 2600 block of North 23rd Street, were both arrested Monday, police said.

Both suspects are charged with murder and related offenses.

$15M grant for universal pre-K plan

The William Penn Foundation announced a $15 million grant to support the expansion of high-quality early education for low-income families in Philly.

@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Mayor Jim Kenney just got a significant boost in his ongoing push for universal pre-K in Philadelphia.

The William Penn Foundation announced Tuesday that it will provide a $15 million grant through the Fund for Quality to help expand free pre-kindergarten early education services to low-income Philly families.

KENNEY'S FUND-RAISING GOAL FOR THE PROGRAM

"This investment helps providers enhance facilities, enroll more students, and grow businesses," Kenney said in a statement. "My administration is committed to increasing quality pre-K opportunities, but we certainly cannot do it alone. Business and philanthropic participation is critical to the success of this effort."

The announcement took place at Rising Stars APM Preschool Center in Kensington, an early childhood education center that has received support from the Fund for Quality, which was founded in 2014 to expand high-quality early education.

Just 10 weeks into his first term as mayor, Kenney has made universal pre-K a central focus of his administration. He is pushing to pass a new tax on sugary drinks to help fund universal pre-K, and has set up a website for parents and pre-K providers to get involved with the city's efforts.

Kenney set a goal of raising $256 million with a mix of state and federal funding to give an additional 25,000 kids pre-K education over the next five years during his first budget speech last week. Right now Kenney is working to create 6,500 new, locally funded and quality places at pre-K programs.

He's also received support from the private business community. Comcast senior executive VP David Cohen, former chief of staff to former Mayor Ed Rendell, wrote an op-ed last week urging the local business community to step up to help provide funding.

"Pre-K is not an option — it's a critical equalizer," Cohen wrote in his Feb. 29 op-ed. "Neuroscientists attest that 80 to 90 percent of a child's brain is developed in the first five years of life. Early education can enable our most vulnerable children to break the cycle of poverty by capitalizing on the tremendous learning potential of 3- and 4-year-olds during this critical time in their development."

"Business and philanthropic participation is critical to the success of this effort."
Kenney, on private financial support of universal pre-K

State gets new slogan

Tourists pose with the Rocky statue. GETTY IMAGES

Pennsylvania launched a new tourism campaign Tuesday that harkens back to its colonial roots.

"Pennsylvania. Pursue Your Happiness," is now the state's new slogan.

The words ring of the well-known phrase in the Declaration of Independence that declares all human beings' unalienable rights, and it won by a landslide in a multistate contest.

"The tourism office has been working closely to create a dynamic and inspirational brand campaign that captures the strength of Pennsylvania's diverse tourism products. We wanted a brand that could really embrace the unique spirit of Pennsylvania, and our new brand and tagline is really a bold declaration for travelers to pursue your happiness," said Carrie Fischer Lepore, deputy secretary for marketing, tourism and film for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Lepore said that Tuesday's announcement was the culmination of more than a year's time spent on meetings with tourism industry stakeholders, consumer testing of people from nine different states, focus groups, and consultations with a Pittsburgh advertising firm.

Lepore said the new ad campaign was actually the brainchild of the state's previous administration, under then-Gov. Tom Corbett. At the time, Pennsylvania's slogan was "The State of Independence," and the Keystone State had been experiencing a decline in tourism and the industry decided to make a change.

"We're, of course, very happy that it ties in with where America began," said Meryl Levitz, CEO of Visit Philadelphia.

"We've found that the slogans that work best are the slogans that tell people what to do. Telling you to pursue your happiness — and it's also an active word."

Sources said about $200,000 in public and private money was spent on the whole initiative.

"Happiness is our keystone," Lepore added.

Within the next few days, weeks and months, the new look will appear on ads, online, on social media, in travel guides and on billboards.

According to state statistics, travel is roughly a $40 billion industry in Pennsylvania, employing about 450,000 people. In 2013, 193 million visitors traveled to Pennsylvania. To learn more, visit Visitpa.com to see the brand in use. JENNY DEHUFF

Palestinian kills US tourist in stabbing spree in Tel Aviv

The attack took place in the popular Jaffa port area, which is a favorite spot among visitors to the region. The Magen David Adom ambulance service said four of the wounded had severe injuries.

An American tourist was stabbed to death and at least nine other people were wounded by a Palestinian armed with a knife on a popular boardwalk in Tel Aviv on Tuesday, authorities said, while Vice President Joe Biden was in a meeting a few miles away.

"A terrorist, an illegal resident who came from somewhere in the Palestinian territories, came here to Jaffa and embarked on a run ... along the boardwalk. On his way he indiscriminately stabbed people," Tel Aviv Mayor Ron Huldai told Army Radio.

He said a police officer eventually caught up with the attacker and shot him dead.

Biden arrived in Israel late Tuesday for a two-day visit and was meeting former Israeli President Shimon Peres in Jaffa around the time of the stabbings.

Tuesday also saw three other attacks by Palestinians.

In Jerusalem, a Palestinian opened fire at Israeli police on a crowded street, seriously wounding two officers, before being shot dead, and a 50-year-old Palestinian woman who tried to stab Israeli police officers was also shot and killed.

In the Tel Aviv suburb of Petah Tikva, a Palestinian entered a store and stabbed an Israeli. The injured man and the store owner together overpowered the attacker and fought him off using the same knife. The attacker died of his wounds, a police spokesman said.

Since October, Palestinian stabbings, shootings and car rammings have killed 28 Israelis and two Americans. Israeli forces have killed at least 177 Palestinians, 119 of whom Israel says were assailants. Most others were shot dead during violent protests. REUTERS

Trump lacks foreign policy team, spurns criticism from abroad

Trump promised to name his foreign policy and national security advisers last month, told MSNBC that he has met with people but made no decision yet on who to advise him on global affairs.

Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump acknowledged on Tuesday he did not yet have a foreign policy team and dismissed criticism that his harsh rhetoric on immigration and threats to gut global trade deals would damage America's standing on the world stage.

Trump told a Feb. 17 town hall event hosted by the network that he would name his advisers the following week, and last week said the list would come in another week or two.

Asked whether he had a team, Trump said on Tuesday: "Yes, there is a team. Well, there's not a team. I'm going to be forming a team at the appropriate time. I've met with far more than three people."

Foreign diplomats from Europe, the Middle East, Latin America and Asia have expressed alarm to U.S. government officials about Trump, calling his public statements inflammatory and insulting.

The former reality television star shot back, saying diplomats are upset over his tough stance on trade and his promises to return jobs to the United States as he seeks the party's nomination for the Nov. 8 presidential election.

He has centered his campaign on illegal immigration, jobs and trade, criticizing China, Japan and Mexico, among others, and pointing to his business background as evidence he can negotiate with other countries.

Trump has said he

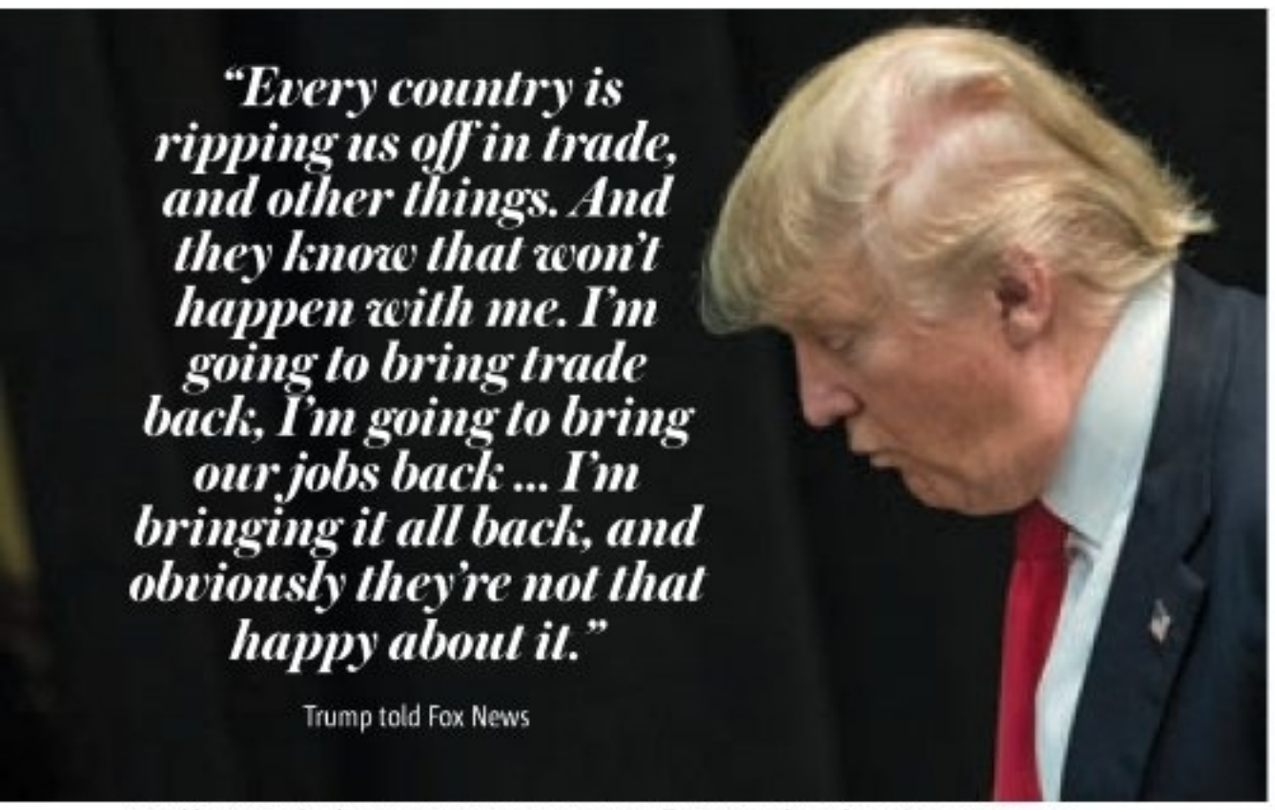
WHITE HOUSE



"Every country is ripping us off in trade, and other things. And they know that won't happen with me. I'm going to bring trade back, I'm going to bring our jobs back ... I'm bringing it all back, and obviously they're not that happy about it."
Trump told Fox News

relies mostly on his own thoughts to determine his foreign policy stance.

On Tuesday, Trump pointed to Alabama Sen. Jeff Sessions, who recently endorsed him, as someone he would consider for his team, adding that he would make a decision "in due time."

Sessions is not known as one of the party's leading foreign policy voices in the Senate. He opposes comprehensive immigration reform and supports tight border security measures.

Trump has also announced endorsements from two foreign policy figures: former senior CIA officer Gary Berntsen, who was involved in major operations in Afghanistan after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, and retired military officer Jim Waurishuk. REUTERS

Gun industry wants looser rules on silencers

The U.S. gun industry is trying to shake off the Hollywood hit man image of the gun silencer and rebrand it as a hearing-protection device in a campaign to roll back regulations that date to the 1930s.

Industry lobbying has led to more than a dozen states legalizing silencers for hunting since 2011. Now gun advocates are pressing Congress to repeal a Depression-era law that requires a months-long screening process for silencer buyers — far more scrutiny than gun buyers face.

Sales of silencers — or "suppressors," as the industry prefers to call them — are booming. The number of silencers registered with the federal government more than doubled to 792,282 in February 2015 from 360,534 in March 2012, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

A customer holds a Remington 1911 equipped with a silencer at Blue Ridge Arsenal in Chantilly, Virginia. GETTY IMAGES

Despite their name, silencers can only quiet a gunshot to the level of a jackhammer — not much use for James Bond-style hit jobs.

Silencers are rarely used in crimes, according to a 10-year study published in 2007 by the Western Criminology Review. Researchers estimated silencers were involved in 30 to 40 of the 75,000 federal criminal cases filed each year. The study found only two federal cases involving a silencer used in murders.

Arizona Republican Rep. Matt Salmon said silencers could allow soldiers and hunters to avoid the kind of hearing damage that has forced him to wear a hearing aid after 50 years of shooting guns.

"If we have something that mitigates that kind of hearing loss, we ought to be encouraging it," Salmon said.

In October, he introduced legislation that would replace the silencer screening process with a simpler background check.

The lobbying push alarms some legislators and game wardens who believe quieter guns could make it harder to catch criminals and poachers.

"What legitimate reason does a person have to be wandering around the streets of a big city with a silencer?" asked Joe Mullery, a Democrat who represents a high-crime Minneapolis district in the Minnesota state legislature. REUTERS

Kelly Clarkson doesn't like Dr. Luke either

While so far Kesha is the only singer to come forward saying superproducer Dr. Luke did anything inappropriate with her — you know, like sexual assault-levels of inappropriate — other pop stars are at least willing to chime in about how unpleasant he is. Take, for example, original recipe "American Idol" Kelly Clarkson, who admitted in an interview with Australian radio program "The Kyle and Jackie O Show" — who are really on fire this week, I have to say — that Dr. Luke definitely rubbed her the wrong way. "A lot of artists that have worked with him don't work with him anymore for pretty good, solid reasons," Clarkson says. "He's not a good person to me. We've clashed. I can't really say anything other than that." Except she totally can: "He's a talented dude, but he just lied a lot. I've run into a couple really bad situations. Musically, it's been really hard for me because he will just lie to people and it makes the artist look bad. And he's kind of difficult to work with, he's kind of demeaning," she adds. "Even the last time I worked with him, I only worked with him because literally I got blackmailed by my label. They were like, 'We will not put your album out if you don't do this.'" Well that sounds like a lovely, healthy working environment.

Why is Miley Cyrus trolling 'Fuller House' fans?

Miley Cyrus is under fire for using Instagram to dredge up the past — and not even on a Thursday! The "Wrecking Ball" singer for some reason posted a pair of side-by-side images of "Fuller House" star Jodie Sweetin from back in her more party-friendly days, straddling an unidentified tattooed man, along with the caption "Current Mood #fullerhouse." Oh, and the reason the man she's on top of is unidentified? Because his face has been obscured with cut-outs of the face of "Fuller House" co-star Dave Coulier. That's right, Uncle Joey. It's unclear why Cyrus is putting this out there, but if the comments on the photo are any indication, fans of Sweetin are not having it. "You shouldn't really rehash Jodie's past, she has moved on by this and has cleaned up her life," one comment read. "Please focus on your own life." And of course a lot of people just posted, "How rude."

Kim Kardashian lashes out at her Twitter critics

It looks like Kanye West isn't the only one in that household who can go off all unhinged on Twitter. His wife, Kim Kardashian, spent an evening this week striking back at other celebrities who had dared to comment on her recent posting of a nude photo, and the results are pretty astonishingly petty. "Sorry I'm late to the party, guys. I was busy cashing my $80 million video game check and transferring $53 million into our joint account," she started off before responding directly to Piers Morgan, Bette Midler and Chloe Grace Moretz — the three of whom, by the way, would make a very entertaining crime-fighting team. I'm not sure which is colder, Kardashian's response to Midler — "I really didn't want to bring up how you sent me a gift awhile back trying to be a fake friend then come at me" — or Moretz. But here, for your enjoyment, is the exchange Kardashian had with the 19-year-old. Moretz: "I truly hope you realize how important setting goals are for young women, teaching them we have so much more to offer than just our bodies." Kardashian: "Let's all welcome Chloe Moretz to Twitter, since no one knows who she is. Your nylon cover is cute, boo." And then she posted another nude photo. Classy!

What it's like to act for Terrence Malick

Freida Pinto tells us all about the fruitful chaos of being in the director's new "Knight of Cups."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Freida Pinto plays a model who briefly bewitches Christian Bale's Hollywood player in Terrence Malick's "Knight of Cups," in theaters Friday. BROAD GREEN PICTURES

Not everyone who acts in a Terrence Malick movie winds up in a Terrence Malick movie. He's notorious for eliminating actors in the editing process. His latest, "Knight of Cups," doesn't feature Joel Kinnaman, who, like some others, shot for a day but didn't make the cut.

Freida Pinto did make the cut. The Indian actress, 31, plays one of the six women Christian Bale's Hollywood player Rick romances through the movie. Partly due to the role's prominence, she knew early on she wouldn't be eliminated.

"I would tell people, 'I'm going to be in the Terrence Malick movie!' And they'd say, 'Um, I've actually been cut out of the film,'" Pinto recalls.

Reports about acting for the director — of such quasi-experimental films as "Badlands," "Days of Heaven," "The New World" and "The Tree of Life" — tend to include showing up on set with no clear notion of what you're doing, and maybe even why you're there at all. Even with an actual character to play, for Pinto it was no different.

> "You go on set and you're fully surprised. That's what life is. It throws you a curveball and you've got to act as soon as it's thrown at you."

When asked how he described the character to her, Pinto replies, "He didn't describe her. He just asked me to describe experiences that have shaped me." She wasn't even sure what her character was like.

"I remember when we were filming, I said a few things [to Rick] that were harsh and mean," she explains. "Then Terry — very sweetly, with a smile across his face — said, 'That's very out of character, don't you think?' And I was like, 'I don't know! I don't know what this character thinks!' Having seen the final cut, it makes sense."

This sounds like a chaotic way to work, even for a film with an experimental narrative being partly made up as it's shot (and then later, in the two years it took to edit). But Pinto found it close to a spiritual experience.

"You go on set and you're fully surprised," she says. "That's what life is. It throws you a curveball and you've got to act as soon as it's thrown at you. When doing a Terrence Malick film, you have to be ever-present and just go with the flow."

She didn't realize until doing press that the film made her think about the industry and her own career. She took off with "Slumdog Millionaire," followed by a rash of roles in big Hollywood films, like "Rise of the Planet of the Apes" and "Immortals," both of which mainly regulated her to the pretty girl. She then found she was a flavor of the month, "replaced" by fresh starlets.

GETTY IMAGES

"There's always going to be a new one. There's always going to be a new best thing. Sometimes you learn that the harsh way," Pinto says. "The lesson I can extrapolate from this is nothing is permanent. There's a feeling of attachment to material, to accolades. That can be very destructive."

The feminist Wonder Woman

Geek Girl in Hollywood

JENNA BUSCH
legionofleia.com

Gal Gadot (with Ben Affleck) may be a great Wonder Woman in "Batman v. Superman: Dawn of Justice. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

When Gal Gadot was cast as Wonder Woman in "Batman v. Superman: Dawn of Justice," many people were unhappy. They didn't like that she's a model. They didn't like that she's skinny.

The thing is, Gadot has been taking this role so seriously that it's mostly shut everyone up. She constantly speaks about the character and has clearly put so much love into playing Wonder Woman that, whatever happens with the rest of the film, I'm already sure I'll love her. In fact, the few people I know who've seen it have unanimously praised her performance.

In a recent interview with Glamour magazine, Gadot talked about how Wonder Woman isn't there as a love interest or to serve anyone else. She's independent. She also talked about feminism, which can get you a load of Internet pushback these days. Talking about it these days is brave.

Gadot said, "There are such misconceptions as to what a feminist is. Feminism is about equality. I want all people to have the same opportunities and to get the same salaries for the same jobs. I realize I'm doing what I want to do because of the women before me who laid the groundwork. Without them I wouldn't be an educated working mother who is following her dreams. I wouldn't be here."

Wonder Woman has been a part of the feminist movement for her entire history, from her reflection of the Rosie the Riveter archetype in the '40s to the pushback in the '50s. She lost her powers in the '60s when women were heading back out to work again. Gloria Steinem called for the return of her powers in the early '70s, putting her on the cover of Ms. magazine. She's been the most recognizable female superhero in the comic book world and, after decades, is getting her very first shot at the big screen.

What's important here is that Wonder Woman represents what we can be. She was powerful when most women weren't. She embodies equality. In the end, it doesn't matter who plays her but that we finally get to see her.

R&B star Tinashe takes the wheel

The singer's "Joyride" is one worth taking.

RACHEL RACZKA

If you go:

March 15 at 7 p.m.
Theatre of Living Arts
334 South St.
Philadelphia

lnphilly.com

Tinashe knows how to work the system. The 23-year-old rising star leaked her own track, "Party Favors," after feeling her label was slacking — and then leaked that she was behind the leak in an interview with Spin in December.

"It was something that I felt like I had to do to get the ball rolling," she tells us earlier this week from her home outside L.A. "I'm just that type of person, in general. I can't wait around for things to happen. I'll do it myself if I have to."

Her fans have taken a similar approach, leaking any tracks — new, old or unreleased — they can get their hands on while they patiently wait the release of her sophomore studio album, "Joyride." This is good in the way that she knows they're dedicated; not so good in that her music is leaked without her knowledge or permission.

"Idk who leaks these things but it's a bit creepy/invasion of privacy aside from being disrespectful to my art," she tweeted after "Secret," an unreleased track with DJ Mustard leaked in January. A leaked older track titled "On a Wave" featuring Drake leaked in June, but was quickly scrubbed from the Web. But the leak was all that was needed, because now it's known: a Tinashe-Drake track exists.

More than anything, the singer, born Tinashe Jorgenson Kachingwe, is serious about her work. The Kentucky native has a low-key home life with her family outside the city — overzealous fans leave love notes on her door, a too-close for comfort effort, she admits: "You learn to expect it if you want to be at a certain level of success" — and is self-taught in sound production and engineering. She can mix her own work and is an active participant the collaboration process.

"It started out of necessity, and not wanting to wait for people to do things for me," she says. "It became me wanting to create my own body of work. [Knowing sound production] gives you a whole other level of perspective. When you know how songs are made, it doesn't limit you as a writer or a creator when you to be able to express exactly what you're thinking or seeing."

"Joyride" is set to drop sometime this spring, and three tracks from the LP — "Player," featuring Chris Brown; the aforementioned "Party Favors"; and most recently, "Ride of Your Life" — are already ready for public consumption. She's getting ready to head out on her own headline world tour (aptly titled the Joyride Tour), after opening for the likes of Katy Perry and Nicki Minaj, who she somehow sweetly falls between stylistically. The tour will feature music from her forthcoming album.

"This time we're just trying to do it bigger and better," Tinashe says of this round of shows. "[The last tour] was a learning experience, and now I'm ready to step my game up."

La Columbe Draft Latte

La Colombe is branching out with a product that's light on sugar. LA COLOMBE

Coffee in a can

La Colombe introduces a new beverage that combines the crisp refreshment of iced coffee with the frothiness of a hot latte.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

On March 1, La Colombe craft coffee roasters CEO and co-founder of Todd Carmichael introduced the Draft Latte in a can, a blend of cold-pressed espresso, nutrient-rich milk and only two grams of cane sugar. The high-quality organic coffee cocktail is available for purchase at LaColombe.com, as well as in La Colombe cafes in Philadelphia, Manhattan, Washington, D.C., and Chicago.

Not only has Carmichael introduced a new frothy coffee beverage available to go, but he also has a patent pending on what sounds like the innovative process of creating a texturized drink in a can. The InnoValve can is produced exclusively by Crown Holdings, and Carmichael is crafting a new process for combining coffee and milk.

"The canned version of Draft Latte instantly froths when cracked open, ensuring that the milk froths and combines perfectly with the coffee to create the full, textured mouth feel of a traditional hot latte," says Carmichael.

Considering this is not the first big thing to come out of Carmichael's La Colombe Fishtown location since its 2014 opening — the Frankford Avenue hotspot has a Coffee Lab, in-house draft latte tap systems and a distillery's output of coffee-infused Different Drum Rum — Carmichael is on a roll.

"Rittenhouse was our first cafe, first workshop, our first roasting space and where we got to figure out who we are," says Carmichael, comparing his 19th Street "first child" to his new baby in Fishtown. "Rittenhouse was all about fitting an elevated coffee experience into a denser downtown, whereas the Fishtown cafe is a place we can stretch out, flex our creativity and push the envelope a little further. The vibe created by the open space and natural light gives people somewhere to think their big ideas, to talk them over and to put them into action."

La Colombe Fishtown's distillery is where Carmichael began the process of using less sugar in his concoctions. The great thing about Different Drum Rum is also the great thing about the Draft Latte: The rum has no sugar added after distilling, the latte barely any.

"I'm a father of four and I see this awful trend of beverages and foods that are loading our kids and ourselves with sugar," says Carmichael. "I wanted to make something that I felt good about drinking, something I could serve to my family with confidence, something that's just plain better for you. Each can only has a pinch of natural cane sugar, and it's a healthier drink for it."

La Colombe Draft Latte cans can be purchased online at www.lacolombe.com

What's in the pipeline

Dalian on the Park ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

We take a look at the new construction projects coming up.

ALLIE VOLPE
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Philly isn't the same city it was five years ago — and the skyline is still continuing to evolve. Between projects that are hitting the ground running this year to new apartment complexes popping up, here are some bits of new development eye candy to look out for.

Coming soon

Philadelphia's first Mormon Temple (1739 Vine St., open house beginning Aug. 5, 2016) is also the first in the state. The temple's design nods to colonial-era Philly with spires inspired by Independence Hall and furnishings modeled after those from the country's earliest days. The 53,000-square-foot, neoclassical temple will also be home to a reflecting pool and garden, both open to the public.

Not one but two new locations of Target (19th and Chestnut streets, 12th and Chestnut streets, opening July 2016) are in the works. The convenience retailer is opening two smaller-scale stores in Rittenhouse Square and Washington Square West, occupying 21,000 square feet and 19,000 square feet, respectively. Both will offer order pickup. Mark your calendars for October 2017 when the near-Art Museum Target is set to open its doors.

Come this fall, Philly will have a chic new apartment building. Dalian on the Park (500 N. 21st St., opening fall 2016) will have 293 swanky residences with wood floors and floor-to-ceiling windows — but the contemporary architectural design by MV+A architects aren't the only perks. The 10-story structure will be situated above a Whole Foods and feature a hotel-style lobby and media lounge, a rooftop infinity pool and lush lounge area, fitness center, billiards lounge and more.

Breaking ground

The Viaduct Rail Park Phase I (North Broad Street at Noble Street toward Callowhill between 11th and 12th streets) would begin the reimagining of the abandoned Reading Railroad Viaduct into the selfie-inspiring 3-mile elevated park (think New York City's High Line, but Philly style). Work could begin as early as this spring — that is, if the project, run by the Center City District, can raise the remainder of the $9.6 million goal for Phase I. (They've got $5.1 million in the bank now.) To help, the Bacon Brothers — that's Kevin Bacon and his brother, Michael — performed at a benefit concert at Union Transfer back in February.

Target

Viaduct Rail Park

Work is already underway on the LOVE Park redesign (16th Street and JFK Boulevard), which is getting a little sprucing up courtesy of added greenery, a new dining area, colorful granite and new welcome center. As part of renovating the Saucer, a site-specific public art commission created by duo Laura Haddad and Tom Drugan will be installed later in the year. Called "Chromoscope," the work is a colorful ceiling mural. Make plans for multiple visits: Natural light affects the way the mural catches your eye.

Keep 'em fresh

Cut flowers are living on borrowed time, true. But you can extend their life with these pro tips:

- Remove all leaves below the water baseline in your vase.
- Add a packet of flower food.
- Change the water every two to three days.

Stick with a few key colors instead of a rainbow assortment. SAUL METNICK

Setting the spring table

Want to freshen up that Easter brunch? It's all about the blooms. Here, we share pro tips for elevating your arrangements.

MONICA WEYMOUTH
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

It's been a while since we've had company. To be honest, it's been a while since we've eaten a meal at the table (winter is tough and couches are cozy — sorry, mom). But with spring on the horizon, Easter right behind it and Mother's Day, as always, closer than you think, that's about to change.

With this in mind, we checked in with Bronwen Smith, owner and lead designer of Manhattan's B Floral, for some tips on freshening up the brunch table. Because here's what Pinterest will never tell you: When beautiful, sophisticated flowers are in the mix, no one will notice the chipped coffee mugs, mismatched plates and paper napkins.

Think seasonal

Early spring boasts some of the most gorgeous blooms, so why not take a cue from the farm-to-table trend and stick with what's in season? "When picking flowers for spring table designs, we opt for common fan-favorites like peonies, tulip and sweet peas," says Smith. "Peonies add fullness and life to an arrangement, while tulips and sweet peas embody the overall essence of spring."

Keep it simple

Supermarket bouquets are stuffed with a rainbow of colors and stems, which is exactly what you want to avoid. For an effortlessly chic, elevated arrangement, pick one color and one flower. "If you're looking to take a DIY centerpiece to the next level, try a sleek, modern, monochromatic or mono-flower design that is simple yet stunning," says Smith. "Stick to varying shades of the same spring color, such as purple, to achieve a polished look." As for the vase, choose something unique but not distracting — it's a supporting character, after all.

Go beyond the bouquet

The problem with centerpieces is that, well, they're in the center. If you're feeling crafty and want to declutter the table, consider garlands or wreaths. "We love to think outside the vase and use flowers in the overall table design," says Smith. "Chair garlands add an unexpected touch, and floral wreaths show that flowers can shine outside of the vase." If you have little ones on the guest list, don't forget the flower crowns!

Eagles free agency guide

With nearly $27 million in salary cap space, the Eagles will be big players when free agency starts.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

After a shocking Tuesday that saw Howie Roseman cleanse the Eagles of Chip Kelly acquisitions Byron Maxwell, Kiko Alonso and DeMarco Murray, the team has quite a few new holes to fill.

With new draft choices expected to be announced as compensation for the Birds' recent dealings with the Dolphins and Titans, the Eagles will address a lot of their needs through the draft. But NFL free agency, which starts Wednesday at 4 p.m., will likely also be very busy for Philadelphia. They got to an early start, signing Bills recent cut cornerback Leodis McKelvin to a two-year deal. The defensive back played under Jim Schwartz when he was coaching in Buffalo.

Here's a look at some positions of need and how the squad is most likely to act.

Quarterback

Already have: Sam Bradford, Mark Sanchez, McLeod Bethel-Thompson
Need: Long term solution
Action: The Eagles are likely to draft a quarterback. Where and who will depend a lot on the return they receive for their recent dealings, but Roseman and head coach Doug Pederson have implied that the quarterback of the future could come from the class of 2016.

Running back

Already have: Ryan Mathews, Darren Sproles, Kenjon Barner
Need: Depth, clear featured back
Action: The Eagles have two talented runners in Mathews and Sproles, but neither seem to be an every-down back, the kind that will thrive in the Pederson offense. They could always stay put, but there are options on the free agent market like Matt Forte and Doug Martin.

Wide receiver

Already have: Jordan Matthews, Nelson Agholor, Josh Huff
Need: Depth, veteran leadership
Action: The Birds could use a veteran presence in the wide receivers' room, as well as a reliable, sure-handed option alongside the team's talented youngsters. While drafting a wideout is possible, the team could add from a relatively deep pool that includes Andre Johnson, Roddy White, Anquan Bolden, Marques Colston and others.

Offensive line

Already have: Lane Johnson, Jason Peters, Jason Kelce, Matt Tobin
Need: Youth, starting guards
Action: This is perhaps the biggest position of need and one the Eagles will address both in the draft and in free agency. Look for them to ink a guard when free agency begins, and also pick the best available O-lineman in April. The current group, aside from Johnson, is getting older and lacks depth.

Linebacker

Already have: Mychal Kendricks, Jordan Hicks
Need: Depth, replacement for Alonso
Action: The Eagles have enough starting talent to move Connor Barwin or Brandon Graham from defensive end back to outside linebacker (where they played in the 3-4) but will also likely add a veteran, middle-priced linebacker in free agency to replace Alonso.

Are the Eagles in the mix for the services of Matt Forte? GETTY IMAGES

Cornerback

Already have: Eric Rowe, E.J. Biggers, Leodis McKelvin
Need: depth
Action: In all likelihood they will try and bring back Nolan Carroll III, but competition will be fierce in this year's market. The Birds will be shy to offer any large contracts to premier free agents. They will be looking to add some depth behind McKelvin, who has 12 career interceptions in 60 starts.

Safety

Already have: Malcolm Jenkins, Chris Maragos,
Need: Starter
Action: The Eagles and Walter Thurmond have shown mutual interest to get a deal done, but nothing has happened yet. If he doesn't return, there has been a lot of interest in other free agents like Tony Jefferson and George Iloka.

Optimistic Owls still have work to do

The latest brackетology has the Owls in the dance, but there is a busy week ahead.

JEFF MCMENAMIN
@Jeff_McMenamin
sports@metro.us

The 2015-16 season for the Temple Owls marked their 36th 20-win season (20-10, 14-4) in program history and eighth under coach Fran Dunphy.

Dunphy is projected to win the American Athletic Conference's Coach of the Year award for a second straight year after guiding the Owls to the AAC's best record this season. Picked to finish sixth in the AAC in the preseason, the Owls proved to be battle-tested, going a perfect 5-0 against conference foes Cincinnati, Connecticut and SMU.

They enter the AAC Tournament as an NCAA Tournament bubble team and still have work to do to punch their ticket into March Madness. As the No. 1 seed, the Owls will face the winners of No. 8 seed East Carolina, who they lost to 64-61 on the road back in January, or No. 9 seed South Florida, who Temple disposed of twice this season.

The Owls have been led all season in scoring by senior guard Quenton DeCosey, who's averaging 15.7 points, 5.9 rebounds and 2.6 assists on the year. As a team, the Owls have a 14-1 record this season when DeCosey scores 15 or more points.

Sophomore forward Obi Enechionyia is second on the team in scoring with 11.4 points per game. Since Jan. 27, Enechionyia has averaged 15.5 points per game as the Owls finished the season with a 9-3 record.

Getting a couple wins in the AAC Tournament is especially important to the Owls because of the teams they'll likely have to face if they get past East Carolina or South Florida in the quarterfinals. With a win, the Owls will face either No. 4 Cincinnati or No. 5 UConn in the semifinals.

A regular season AAC Championship will likely not be enough to propel Temple into the Big Dance. GETTY IMAGES

Although the Owls have beaten both teams twice this season, many bracket analysts see that game as somewhat of a play-in game, as all three teams sit firmly on the NCAA Tournament bubble.

"I am sure any of us in this league would say we need to do our best and win games [in the AAC Tournament] to get in the NCAA Tournament," Dunphy said. "There are a lot of us in the same boat."

Temple advanced to the AAC Tournament's semifinal last year before losing to eventual champion SMU. Although having a stellar record (23-10, 13-5) and marquee win (a 77-52 takedown of No. 10 Kansas) the Owls were left just on the outside of the field of 68 as the 69th ranked team. Many attributed their snubbing for not having enough wins against the top teams in the conference. The opposite can be said about this season, which is why advancing in the AAC Tournament is so crucial.

Temple plays the winner of either No. 8 ECU or No. 9 USF at noon on Friday on ESPN2.

Aries Protect what you've worked so hard to acquire. Don't lend money or possessions. Take control by knowing what you want and strategically negotiating on your behalf.

Taurus Sharing your knowledge will lead to a liaison with someone who is exceptionally well informed and connected. A face-to-face meeting is your best option.

Gemini Avoid criticism as well as being taken advantage of. Set guidelines and keep the balance in order to get things done and feel good about your position and reputation.

Cancer Plan and present what you have to offer with precision and clarity. Don't expect everyone to agree with you. Gravitate toward those who show interest and want to get involved.

Leo Accept whatever challenge comes your way and do your best to display strong leadership. Don't let your ego stand in the way of your progress. Be open to suggestions.

Virgo Partnerships will need an adjustment. Be willing to meet whomever you are dealing with halfway to ensure that you maintain equality in every relationship.

Libra Don't worry about what everyone else is up to when you should be taking care of your emotional and physical well-being. Make personal changes that will bring you peace of mind.

Scorpio Jump into a situation ready to take on whatever challenge comes along. Mental stimulation coupled with creativity and talented people will lead to an interesting prospect.

Sagittarius Stay focused on what's important. Don't let situations spin out of control. Contain your emotions and avoid indulgent behavior that could lead to disaster instead of solutions.

Capricorn Don't worry so much about what other people are doing. Your goal is to follow through with your plans and to make the changes that will ensure your happiness and success.

Aquarius Take a new look at an old idea in order to see how you can turn it into a workable project with updates that were not available to you in the past.

Pisces Refuse to be pushed by someone bullying you. Sharing personal secrets will lead to a nasty rumor that will put you in a precarious position.
